The "Lucky Dog" Story

The name "Lucky Dog" originates from the famous Draper & Maynard Sporting Goods Company slogan, "The Lucky Dog Kind". The slogan was first heard at Fenway Park when Babe Ruth spoke to a rookie with a new baseball glove. Noting the D & M trademark depicting Maynard's bird dog, Nick, the Babe exclaimed, "Oh, you've got one of the lucky dog kind." To the good fortune of Plymouth's D & M Company, Ruth's words were overheard by one of their salesmen and shortly thereafter, D & M had the slogan copyrighted.

In 1881, business partners Jason F. Draper (1850-1913) and John Maynard (1846-1937) founded the Draper & Maynard Company in Ashland, New Hampshire to manufacture buckskin gloves. One year later, the firm pioneered production of a padded model at the suggestion of a baseball player.

In 1900, D & M accepted a ten-year tax waiver to relocate their headquarters from Ashland to Plymouth. Using their needle and thread expertise, D & M established itself as a major supplier of baseball equipment for both professional and amateur players. D & M also became well known for its other lines of sporting goods from boxing gloves to golf clubs.

By the 1920s, over ninety percent of all major league baseball players used D & M gloves, and D & M employed over 1,100 people in the Plymouth area. They had established branch offices in New York, San Francisco and Quebec, and they shipped orders worldwide.

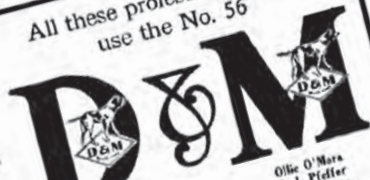

Babe Ruth himself would come to Plymouth to have his baseball gloves custom made. One of his more memorable visits came in 1916 when D & M workers gathered around him as he tried to stitch a baseball. After struggling with it, Ruth finally looked up and said, "I can hit 'em better than I can make 'em."

D & M closed in 1937 after the death of Maynard, who had outlived his partner by twenty-four years. The D & M factory building—located at the north end of Main Street on the roundabout—was renovated in the 1990s and now houses the Plymouth State University Art Department. The spirit of Nick, the "Lucky Dog", lives on here at the Lucky Dog Tavern and Grill.
